Conference Announcement and Call for Submissions

Families in Difficult Times: Conflict, Covid, and Cyberspace

Online, October 10 – October 12, 2022

We are pleased to announce the upcoming 9th Conference of the International Academy of Family Psychology, to be held from October 10 to October 12, 2022. Given the current pandemic conditions, this meeting will be held online, aiming to adjust for different time zones around the world. Save the dates and mark your calendar!

The International Academy of Family Psychology (IAFP) is a professional organization of family psychologists from around the world (see <https://iafponline.com/>). Our conferences address a broad range of issues including “classical” themes such as partnership and child rearing in the context of family diversity, as well as current hot topics. This conference takes a special focus on family stress and coping.

Keynotes and invited symposia will present research on families in times of war and forced migration, family life in the Covid-19 pandemic, families facing high post-separation conflict, and challenges of increasing digitalization. They will discuss services of family support, which often involve multiprofessional collaboration and increasingly rely on digital tools. Submissions of papers, posters, and symposia may contribute to this focal theme, but may also address further issues of family science. Interdisciplinary submissions are welcome!

This meeting is organized in cooperation with Ludwig-Maximilians University in Munich and the German Youth Institute, one of the largest social science research institutes in Europe.

We invite submissions of abstracts until May 30, 2022 (for details see below).

Abstract Submission:

Family researchers are invited to submit abstracts for paper or poster symposia, individual paper or individual poster presentation. For abstract submission, please send a word document (in English) including the following information to iafp@dji.de:
